

October 1st Protest is for National Survival: EndBadGovernance – Organizers Speak Out!

A people united against corruption and bad leadership!

Nigeria, my country! A land of endless potential, beauty, and yes, suffering—plenty of it. October 1st, which used to be a day of celebration for our independence, has turned into a battleground for survival. This isn't your usual independence parade, my brothers and sisters. No be say we go dey sing national anthem and eat jollof for stadium o! EndBadGovernance is coming in strong, with a clear message: we can't continue like this. Enough is enough!

Nigeria's Independence: A Bit of Context

Nigeria gained its independence from British colonial rule on October 1, 1960. A moment that was supposed to usher us into greatness. A flag of green and white, symbolizing agriculture and peace, was hoisted. Fast forward over 60 years later, that flag now feels like it's waving in surrender. Surrender to corruption, poverty, insecurity, bad governance, and the collapse of systems that were meant to uplift us.

We've become the giant of Africa only by name. The reality on the ground is a different story. So, why do we still celebrate October 1st? Honestly, many of us have forgotten what we're even celebrating.

EndBadGovernance: Not Just A Hashtag – A Cry for Survival

When we say EndBadGovernance, we're not just throwing around fancy hashtags on Twitter. We're demanding life itself—better roads, stable electricity, functional education, and jobs that actually pay something above 30k. Can you imagine raising kids on N30,000 minimum wage? In this economy? Where one cup of garri can now buy you shares in Dangote's business!

One group, 7hubent Tech, is rallying behind the call for this year's protest. They're not just sitting down folding their hands; they've created WhatsApp groups, websites, and social platforms to coordinate the movement. They've positioned themselves as the backbone, organizing the voices that will march against the oppressors come October 1st.

> "We can't keep letting this country go to waste," says one of the organizers from 7hubent Tech. "The October 1st protest isn't just an event, it's a plea for our survival as a nation."

Nigeria by the Numbers: Population, Language, Facts

Nigeria is home to over 200 million people. That's more than the entire population of some European countries combined. Our capital, Abuja, is meant to be the pride of the nation, but let's be honest—beyond the shiny government buildings, the average Nigerian there still struggles to make ends meet. Lagos, Kano, Ibadan? These cities are bustling hubs, but many of us are just hustling to survive.

Our official language is English, but the real magic happens in the markets when you hear Yoruba, Hausa, Igbo, Pidgin, and a hundred other dialects. This diversity should be our strength, but bad governance is tearing us apart. And that's why the October 1st protest is a make-or-break moment. If we don't fight now, when will we?

Why October 1st Matters: We Can't Continue Like This!

Imagine you've been given a house, but over the years, the roof leaks, the walls crack, and soon, the whole building is at risk of collapsing. That's Nigeria! The house we got on October 1st, 1960, has been mismanaged, and we, the so-called tenants, are left to fend for ourselves in a crumbling mess.

My brother, my sister, this October 1st, don't just stay at home or hang out at your local bar sipping palm wine. The protest is not just a march; it's a survival strategy. We are all in this together, whether you like it or not. Your 4G data may be fast, but when the government does not pay teachers, your younger siblings' education is going nowhere fast!

> "For real, this protest go loud," says another group member. "We dey prepare to make sure say the government no go sleep for October 1st."

They've even teamed up with 7hubent Tech, a Nigerian platform that's becoming the go-to for WhatsApp group coordination. Whether it's organizing protests or spreading information about governance, 7hubent Tech has made it easy for Nigerians to mobilize and share their frustrations. The tech platform connects you with the right people and makes sure the government doesn't pretend they didn't hear us this time.

Personal Testimony: "Na me and Nigeria dey fight, but I no go give up!"

Let me tell you my own story. I grew up thinking life would get better once I finished school. I went to university, did my NYSC, and started looking for a job. Four years, no job. But I still carried on, managing my little side hustles. Then came insecurity, SARS brutality, and the rising cost of everything—from fuel to food.

One day, I realized that being a Nigerian was a full-time job in itself! I couldn't just sit around waiting for a miracle; I had to start protesting against the conditions that made life unbearable. That's how I found myself at the last EndSARS protest. It wasn't just about police brutality; it was about everything that's wrong with this country.

The October 1st protest is the same. It's not just about bad governance; it's about survival. Na me and Nigeria dey fight, but I no go give up!

The Future of Nigeria: Will This Protest Change Anything?

Maybe you're thinking, "We've protested before, and nothing happened. So what's the point?" But the truth is, change doesn't happen overnight. Remember, Rome wasn't built in a day. The more we speak up, the harder it becomes for them to ignore us. Nigeria cannot continue like this, and the more we protest, the more we force the government to pay attention.

And as long as we have platforms like 7hubent Tech, organizing protests and mobilizing Nigerians online, the future isn't as bleak as it seems. Technology is on our side. We're using WhatsApp, Twitter, and Instagram to call out bad governance. We have to keep that momentum going.

FAQ on October 1st Protest

- Why is the October 1st protest important?

This protest is about survival. It's a call to end bad governance and demand better living conditions for all Nigerians.

- Who is organizing the protest?

The protest is a collective effort, but groups like 7hubent Tech are helping with coordination and online mobilization.

- What's the role of 7hubent Tech?

They provide online platforms, especially through WhatsApp groups, to help Nigerians connect and organize for the protest.

- Can the protest really make a difference?

Change takes time, but every protest is a step towards holding the government accountable. We must keep pushing for the Nigeria we deserve.

Final Words: Your Role in This Movement

So, my fellow Nigerians, what will you do on October 1st? Will you sit and watch while others fight for your future, or will you rise up and join the movement? Share this article with your friends and family. Tell everyone you know that EndBadGovernance is not just a trend; it's a cry for survival.

After all, if you don't speak now, what will you tell your children when they ask why things didn't change? Will you tell them you were busy scrolling Instagram?

Join the protest, be part of the solution. Na we get this country!
